

About the Department of Biotechnology

The Department of Biotechnology was established in 2019 with the blessed efforts of the respected President of the University of Anbar and the respected Dean of the College of Science, and the students of the class of 2019-2020 are the first batch in this department in preliminary studies. After completing these requirements, the student obtains a bachelor's degree in biotechnology. Through the curricula prepared by the department, the student will learn about the techniques used in medical fields, such as the techniques used in the diagnosis of microbiology and genetic diseases. And cancer and in forensic medicine, as well as on techniques in the industrial field such as the production of enzymes of all kinds, the production of pharmaceuticals and antibiotics, the production of diagnostic and immunological kit, and... etc. and also learn about environmental technologies such as techniques for treating environmental pollution and finding alternatives to energy production and renewable energy, and the student also learns about the techniques used in the agricultural field, which are concerned with the production and improvement of new strains and varieties resistant to drought, salinity, diseases, insects and the production of biofertilizers and biopesticides.